Illuminating Threads is a visual conversation between three Los Angeles based artists, who are currently investigating and exploring matters concerning time, plant life, our existence within an extremely vulnerable society, human power dynamics and their own personal dialogue with nature, and its echoing relief. The materials, questions and execution of thought might vary, but we are bound by concerns of healing, coping and what it means to be an artist currently living and working in Los Angeles. The simplicity of the prevalent flower image gives way to an incredible depth for the psyche that contradicts its superficiality and reveals a search and deep longing of the human desire for nurturing, compassion and understanding. In current times of tumult and uncertainty, we would like to unearth threads that connect, rather than separate us.

Dalton Warehouse is a collaborative studio and exhibition space located in South Central LA, and run by artists: Katie Kirk, Aubrey Ingmar Manson, Lydia Maria Pfeffer, Daniel Schubert, and Keith Tolch.

We believe in engaging and expanding a growing art community open to thought and provocation through a democratic system developed in our own sphere.
